The pace of business activity is still moving forward in the Inland Empire but at a slightly slower pace, a report from UC Riverside’s School of Business Center for Economic Forecasting and Development found.

The quarterly report on business growth for the area shows a 2% expansion in the fourth quarter of 2019, slightly slower than the estimated 2.1% GDP growth for the nation as a whole. In the previous two quarters, the Inland Empire’s growth rate surpassed the nation’s.

For all of 2019, the area’s growth was 1.9% compared with the nation’s 2.3%. Both rates declined for the year by about 0.6%.

Adam Fowler, director of research for the UC Riverside center, said that growth is expected to continue in 2020, in the 1.9% to 2.4% range. Sustained activity in logistics and other key industries can be counted on, although there a few “pressure points,” Fowler wrote in an analysis.

“In the longer term, the economy will be held back by labor shortages caused in part by California’s lack of home supply and high cost of living relative to other parts of the nation,” Fowler said.

UC Riverside’s economic report is compiled from data that includes employment, economic output, incomes and real estate on local, regional and national levels.
