Rapper JT, who spent two years in a Florida prison, launches initiative for formerly incarcerated women

TheGrio Staff
Sun, July 16, 2023 at 7:33 PM GMT+2 · 2 min read

The Miami rapper on July 13 also released the single “No Bars,” her first solo song since 2019.

Rapper JT of the City Girls is helping formerly incarcerated women access a network of support resources including therapy, housing and employment assistance, substance abuse treatment and more.

No Bars Reform is JT’s newly-launched non-profit initiative, created as a vehicle to “use her voice and platform to help other incarcerated women rehabilitate into society,” according to the official website.

The site links users to resources such as the Felony Record Hub, a digital directory of reentry services including legal support and job listings.

Also featured on No Bars Reform is a link to the Time for Change Foundation, which “offers emergency shelter housing, permanent..."
Rapper JT, who spent two years in a Florida prison, launches initiative for formerly incarcerated women

https://www.yahoo.com/lifestyle/rapper-jt-spent-two-years-173333098.html?guccounter=1